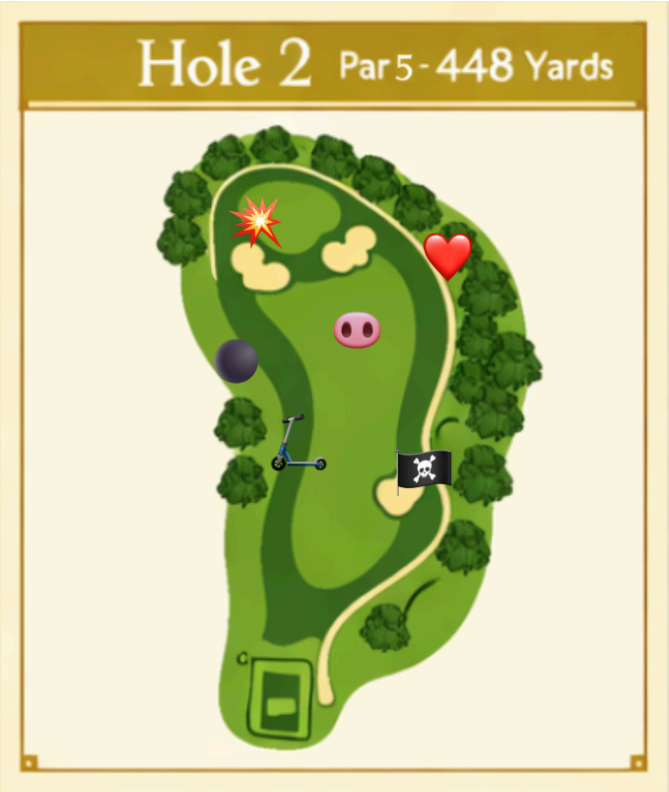
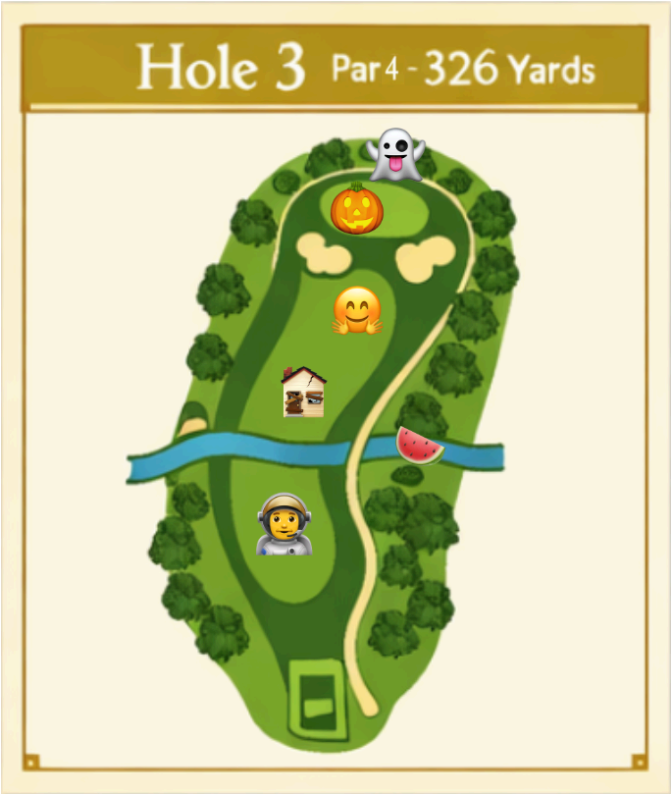
Great shot—windy day, hope I brought my scuba gear! Tried to make up for it and absolutely blasted the next one way right but thankfully short of any trouble. No idea how, but I pulled it together at the end and found the green.

Perfect shot… for building sand castles. Then I overcorrected and launched one way left about 100 yards into no man's land. I managed to roll the next one up, just on the front of the green.





Caught this one flush and left myself about 160 to the pin. Naturally, I overdid the next shot and sent it long. Hit a couple tree branches, but somehow still found the green.

Wow! If I didn't know any better, I might actually consider myself a good golfer after that one!

Should have known the last hole was a fluke, probably cheaper to buy fish food instead of golf balls next time. Ironically, I ended up in close proximity to the beach but saved myself and got to the green eventually.

Running low on golf balls now so I decided to play it safe off the tee. I've been lucky to avoid it mostly so far, but found myself in the same situation as hole 2 after the second shot. Managed to get out of trouble and get onto the green… even though it took a couple tries.

The last hole I can play today so I swung as hard as I could, fantastic swing but managed to nail a tree and bounce backwards about 40 yards. Decided to just follow the tree line but stayed inside the cart path at least. The next shot was just off the back of the green but I got there eventually.
